Bridging the Housing Gap and GSE Reform

Issue

There is a chronic shortage of housing in the U.S. that is driving up housing prices and making it more difficult for lower-income individuals to find safe, affordable housing. Housing production in the U.S. is not keeping pace with expanding housing needs. The underbuilding gap in the U.S. now totals more than 5.5 million housing units. The impact of this growing problem of an under-supply of affordable housing is far-reaching and undermines economic growth—particularly in urban areas. In addition, the government-sponsored enterprises (GSEs) Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac—one of the primary funding sources for housing in the U.S.—have been in conservatorship for over a dozen years. Debate over reforms continues.

Talking Points

- Safe, decent, and affordable housing is critical to the well-being of America’s families, communities, and businesses. The COVID-19 pandemic has intensified the nation’s persistent housing crisis, prompting The Roundtable to mobilize with our national real estate organization partners and jointly advocate for policies that will help to increase housing supplies, grow jobs, and modernize our nation’s critical infrastructure.
- Having a robust housing finance system is critical to expanding America’s housing infrastructure to help meet the nation’s longstanding goal of ensuring decent and affordable housing for all. Current efforts have failed to keep pace with the growing need for affordable housing.
- GSE reform must appropriately balance taxpayer protections and establish an efficient marketplace with a strong, efficient, and sustained financing environment for homeownership, rental housing, and sustained mortgage liquidity.
- As the gap between the number of lower-income renters and the supply of affordable units continues to grow, it is critical for the GSEs to provide support for mortgages to aid low- and moderate-income families—for homeownership and rental housing—as well as underserved areas.
- As American households increasingly turn to the rental market for their housing, a strong housing finance system should support not only homeowners but also aid the expansion of affordable rental housing.
